"ITCHY HEAT" OF ~~FEELING~~ HAVING TO WAIT
FOR SOMEONE ~~IN~~ A HOT, SUNNY PLACE.

AOL BREAK: May be in AOL drive, but doesn't feel like
it, but site seems
to be coming in too clearly and to quickly to be trusted. Going to summarize and break:

Interim summary: Site seems to be a solid, massive structure which has many shapes. I get an "itchy impatience" feeling like you get from having to wait for someone in a hot, sunny place (trapped there, can't leave because they may come, etc.) Place seems to have a definite ambience of being some kind of a monument or public building.

Area around the site should be visible

a: spacey

b: no b.

AOL BREAK: I get a feeling and VERY vague visual of a
"park-like" area

AI BREAK: really impressive
buildings!

NOTE: based on the consistency of the incoming data, I am going to accept the site as being located at or around some large, massive, and impressive building. Specific location desired is in open area which has a tremendous "jumbled" component (COMPARISION TYPE AOL: same type of disarray as shoved and unarranged tables & chairs in an outdoor restaurant).

AI BREAK: I get the impression that this person I'm now dealing with is doing something he doesn't IDEOLOGICALLY want to do, but has a deep, secret joy at doing it. Feeling may be so deep-seated that even he is not aware of it, but it is definitely there. This person impresses me as being, on the surface, someone doing something he doesn't logically agree with, but secretly supports.

NOTE: I think I have switched my attachment from the person who was originally at site to someone else: possibly a person meeting him. This person seems to be easier to have an empathetic contact with. The other (first) person seems to be all businesslike, cold, and factual, with very little (shallow) emotional components to his personality.

5 minutes later, event should be perceivable:

Interim summary: The site seems to concern a meeting of two men, both in suits. One appears to be waiting for a long time for the other. This first one is very businesslike, and unemotional. The second is nervous, seems trapped into something which he doesn't, on the surface, want to do, but inwardly has a secret joy at doing. The event seems to center around the second man bringing an envelope to the first man. Inside the envelope is a folded sheet of paper with a small area of it typed on. 5 minutes later there are no longer any perceptions of either man at the site.

SELF-EVALUATION: I don't know how much of this was AOL, driven by the fact that I accepted the first impressions of the site, which came sooner and clearer than is usual. These first impressions were more on the vague visual level, but I am finding that that seems to be customary with the sealed envelopes, so it is beginning not to bother me so much.

Perceptions "felt" right throughout the session, so I would personally place some credence in it, but always with the skepticism which comes from the knowledge of how sneaky and powerful AOL can be.
